MICHAEL REICHLE | Philosophy

Michael Reichle was born and raised in San Antonio, and comes from a family that values education — both of his parents hold bachelor's degrees from The University of Texas at San Antonio. Known by his friends as thoughtful, kind, intelligent, and a bit dramatic, Michael embraces his identity as a deep thinker and self-proclaimed overthinker.

Philosophy has always captivated him, particularly the way people's ideas are shaped by their experiences and the context in which they live. This passion for complex topics and a drive to share his insights, included delivering a lecture on how Nietzsche, Schopenhauer, and Hume each approached the Paradox of Tragedy.

In addition to his academic pursuits, Michael has taken on leadership roles in student organizations, where he supports and uplifts his peers. His curiosity, critical thinking, and drive to understand the human experience fuel his ambitions for the future.

Michael's goal is to transfer to a four-year university and ultimately attend a top-tier law school, where he hopes to merge his love for philosophy with a career in law — advocating for thoughtful, ethical solutions to today's most pressing issues.

“Our deepest fear is not that we are inadequate. Our deepest fear is that we are powerful beyond measure. It is our light, not our darkness, that most frightens us.”

— Marianna Williamson
